

WE'VE GOT YOU COVERED

Nashua fire officials called it the worst fire in the last decade. The five-alarm blaze on a cold winter's day destroyed a downtown Nashua apartment and commercial building, displacing 30 people and creating clouds of dark smoke that could be seen for miles. More than 125 firefighters battled the blaze for more than three hours, as flames quickly spread from the first story to rooftop and then stubbornly burned in almost every spot of the old building at the corner of Lake and Vine streets.

The Telegraph was there from the first minutes, throughout the day, and stayed on the story for the days and weeks that followed, chronicling efforts to help the homeless and determine the cause of a blaze that destroyed 17 apartments and two street-level stores.

When important news breaks -- floods, elections, fires -- the residents of the Greater Nashua area turn to The Telegraph in print and online to get the details. And, they turn to The Telegraph to praise those on the front lines.

As one reader wrote in a letter we published, "I happened to see the aftermath of the fire that occurred on the corner of Lake and Vine streets. I saw extremely exhausted firefighters. Even in their exhausted state they stopped and asked my young son if he wanted a sticker and to sit in the driver's seat of a fire truck while they were rolling up the large, yellow water hoses. Tears came to my eyes as I was so appreciative to them."

When Nashua area residents want to celebrate and honor those who work for public safety, they turn to The Telegraph.

If not for The Telegraph, where would you turn when tragedy strikes close to home?
